You had me — and all the sinners who would be saints — at “shit.” And with that opening line, the Rev. Nadia Bolz-Weber is off and running in her searingly honest and ultimately fabulous memoir, Pastrix: The Cranky, Beautiful Faith of a Sinner & Saint. As you may have surmised already, this is not your mother’s spiritual memoir.

Pastrix: The Cranky, Beautiful Faith of a Sinner & Saint

Now a New York Times bestseller, Nadia Bolz-Weber takes no prisoners as she reclaims the term "pastrix" (pronounced "pas-triks," a term used by some Christians who refuse to recognize female pastors) in her messy, beautiful, prayer-and-profanity laden narrative about an unconventional life of faith. Heavily tattooed and loud-mouthed, Nadia, a former stand-up comic, sure as hell didn't consider herself to be religious leader material - until the day she ended up leading a friend's funeral in ...

Pastrix, in the end, isn't really about Nadia, or how she looks, or the language she uses. Its about Jesus. And it was like a cool drink of water in a hot, dry place. A few weeks ago a kind friend sent me a copy of Pastrix: The Cranky, Beautiful Faith of a Sinner and Saint (by Nadia Bolz-Weber), and I devoured it.

Pastrix : The Cranky, Beautiful Faith of a Sinner & Saint ...

"Pastrix: the cranky, beautiful faith of a sinner and Saint" by Nadia Bolz-Weber had bits I really liked but, as a memoir, had bits I wasn't so fond. Narcissism is the darkness of memoirs. Too often the spotlight is centred on Bolz-Weber when it could have been fruitfully turned on others. I wish I could see Bolz-Weber through the eyes of others.

In the past, to learn about our faith we would all meet at church and be directed by the minister or priest. No one would question the minister except in socially acceptable ways. Someone trained by the seminary and ordained by the church would guide the discussion back to the doctrine or sanctioned interpretation.
